

Conscription in the modern age

Introduction

Psychological manipulation of a general populous comes as no surprise in the modern age, in which we as a society are preoccupied with the idea of war as a concept. This is to the point in which, children learn about war in school, only to go home and fight wars on their computer consoles in order to win a pixelated medal. They then study war and carry on studying until warfare is a common practice, articulated by the armed struggles of an entire nation. This is the same across the world. In order to remove the preoccupation of warfare within the current international field, the ideas that revolve around warfare need to change from a dramatic reconstruction of a realised war through to fictitious ideals in the modern media with regards to the concept of a soldier or band of soldiers working towards a goal, a victory against an enemy undisclosed as yet (due to the concept of the dystopian future). But where is the idea that was dreamt of so long ago, the Utopia we each yearn for and lack at one and the same time? It's everywhere, in consumer concepts, the sexualisation of all women through the idea's promoted in magazines, billboards and store fronts.

For nearly a century, the Representation of the People act has allowed enfranchisement of all people(s) within the United Kingdom, to the point where male and female suffrage (the right to vote) which was a hard fought for struggle for not dominance in the form of feminism or anything other than the right to be seen and heard as equals on a national and (or) international stage. Equality, be that civil rights or the struggles of men and women, are struggles that not every man, woman and child can fight. Not every man, woman and child has the opportunity to gain an education and (or) to voice their position and opinion in society. Yet the idea of a struggle is taken all too readily for granted.

The idea of militant suffragettes might seem like a foreign concept, in which women would take arms with a view to fighting a war for their right to equality. Militant civil rights is not a far cry from that same concept, in which men of any ethnicity might physically fight for their right to have equal rights in an age where all men and women are meant to be equal. So why would militant children searching for anything, be it food, clothes or the fodder of a militia seem strange when all these things have come to pass?

The concept of disarmament involves not solely deregulation, but simply the removal or laying down of armaments in regions that are not solely focused on creating peace but equally reintegrating citizens into a form of normal society. Imagine your children or grandchildren, stolen from their beds at night in order to fight a war(?) they did not choose, but have no option with regards to fighting. Now imagine conscription in the modern age.

It might come as a shock, but even the advocates for peace in a bygone era; the conscientious objectors were forced to fight a war against a dictator who did not deserve to fight (and usually did not fight, but gladly watched millions of people slaughtered and imprisoned, chaotically destroyed the world and simply invaded nation after nation, poisoning all with hate wherever they went). To assume that they, the opponents in a war are able to apologise is simple. To assume that their apology would be enough to make up for the countless generations lost would be another side. But in the end, an apology from the German Chancellor to the world, on public broadcast would be a start to healing the rift that ultimately led the American state into war, allowed multiple nuclear bombs to loom heavy on the global radar and led to countless military efforts worldwide.

The question is, how do you get someone of an official capacity, such as the German Chancellor to apologise? By firstly apologising on her / his behalf, then coming up with a plan to disarm the world (thus disarming the foe of many a nation) and then preparing a plan for reparations to a continent that to this day is reeling from the toll of an actual mass exodus from every city, village and town. The removal of an entire people(s) from history, of which, to this day has not been fully realised and (or) corrected. But where there were a court case with a view to fixing this problem, who would be first in line in court?

I did not lose a single family member to warfare before the nineteen eighties to the best of my knowledge. But I was not in a Western state during the time of global military conquest and occupation of certain nations. I did not fight a war against Hitler (and the forces of World War II) in all bar words. And whilst I am highly aware of the fact that I am promoting peace, there is still a lot of negative sentiment, clear in the media, engrained in national and social media to the detriment of societal progress. The question now has to be asked, as many people still are not clear on the process of deregulation, disarmament or the promotion of peace. Global Disarmament involves the entire populous of this globe, our home, we call it Earth, some call it Gaia, some call it 'the planet'.

No matter what you wish to call it, the truth is, we as a species according to the United Nations are the sole cause of the destruction of countless ecosystems, and potentially the beginning of the death of the planet. I have noted countless times that, despite the efforts of organisations such as Greenpeace, organisations that are the legacy of World War II such as Volkswagen (a polluter of industrial emissions hazardous to the environment) and Mercedes Benz (a luxury car manufacturer) Armani (a clothing company) and no doubt other more revered organisations are manufacturers of commodities such that Germany is profiteering from the proceeds of war which were created with a view to allowing the concept of reconstruction post war via the League of Nations.

It is important to note, Volkswagen made the VW Beetle, a car that was used like the Land Rover during the War. Armani made uniforms for S.S. officers, and ultimately these organisations could and likely have already been held to account. But the truth of the matter is, when you look at the racialisation of society, the fear within certain corridors of power at the thought of war, and the actual truth of the war(s) in the Middle East, Germany has been re-inducted into the annals of histories tomes.

I have mentioned many times of the need for Global Disarmament with immediate effect, due to the seriousness of the plight (ongoing) of individuals and communities, whole countries of individuals in Africa, who, without prior background or a willingness to fight in these wars are still feeling the effect of the racialisation of an entire planet. If the wars had been fought as to who would protect the African states as they attempted to gain their footing in light of independence from the various states of colonialism, that would be an important point to note. But in recent years, Zambia, which has gained the highest prevalence of Human Immune Virus in minors (that is children in orphanages under the age of 16) than any other country. This is a result of multiple mixed messages, such as for instance the involvement of the church (the message that condoms are bad), a lack of sexual health lessons (consistent and constant sexual education in school) and positive moral messages from the state.

Corruption is endemic and many of the vestiges of a normal state such as National Insurance or a National Health Service, compulsory secondary education and potential developments in the provision of College or University allocation for individuals who live within the requisite catchment area. Who pays for these positions? Homelessness in children is high, again, who supports these young wondering children left vulnerable and at risk of abuse. Meanwhile, on public broadcasts and advertisements, a dog or a cat is worth more to the public than the lives of a human continent of separate countries.

My point is simple. I am formally requesting all nations who have any vested interest in continued relations with African states to support a motion whether in Parliamentary debate or in any supranational organisation that might have a role in the future of African states with regards to the alleviation of debt. This point is simple for one reason. Think of an invasion in your home country. Did you forget? Will you let your children forget? War destroys lives, and due to the complicit accord between states in which a country(ies) were bombed out of existence due to religious resource reasons (global terror and the quest for ever greater rights and freedoms that are not shared in even the greatest of African states, e.g. South Africa in which a man can be burned alive and no-one will do anything, xenophobia is rife, yet no-one will do anything, British citizens are kicked out of the country, yet no-one will do anything. But when a Rhino is hunted, it is the end of the world. N.b. the White Rhino went extinct and is a tragedy for the planet).

Does anyone care about Africa, simply put no. The war against Hitler's forgotten youth, and the future of Germany's new unbiased culture is all that seems to matter to the vast majority of the world who are taught how to fight through psychological means with a view to emancipating people of any country. The world has become a warped dystopia, the dream of yesteryear long forgotten. And at the end of the day, no one will bother if one person dies. No one will bother if one person cuts their ties with a church that didn't care 400 years ago and certainly doesn't care now. No one will bother when a pope who professes his faith internationally chooses to avoid the African states due to racism? Faith issues or worse yet. So, long shot but, do you believe in Global Disarmament?

War

1. Hitler stands with a cigarette on his balcony. I shoot him in the head.
2. Hitler is approaching a train. I shoot him in the head.
3. Hitler is walking down a street. I shoot him in the head.
4. Hitler has kids. I shoot them in the head.
5. Hitler has a family and friends round for christmas. I shoot him in the head.
6. Hitler in the United Nations (doesn't happen). I shoot him in the head.
7. Hitler declares war. I pack a bag and shoot him in the head.
8. Hitler feels depressed. I kick him in the nuts and shoot him in the head.
9. Hitler hides behind an S.S. soldier. I get taken down and die a horrible death. Someone else shoots him in the head.
10. Hitler kills himself.

Peace

Now that Hitler has been vanquished from this our mortal coil. I will say some words for the dearly departed.

...resting in peaceful

In the early days of conquest, William Wallace, a famous Scottish gentleman (soldier and leader) was attempting to invade England. When his invading forces were captured and disbanded, by the English, William Wallace was publicly executed. All enemies of state were usually executed, but William Wallace was hung. He was then drawn (cut in half) and then quartered (cut into four) likely whilst he was still breathing. It's a horrible thought right? Hitler's army was skull capped (an ancient Native American tradition). This of course is the unsavoury truth of warfare since an era in which Japanese soldiers out of honour would stab themselves in the chest and basically die if they lost a battle.

Sun Tzu (ancient Chinese philosopher) wrote a book about War. It is only an art form to individuals who ascribe to the bellicose nature of bygone era's. The world is at war with itself. And as mentioned countless times, without a moral filter, there is only war. Where is the global anti-corruption league (in the United Nations). Why isn't it doing anything to save the memory of all the soldiers who died during World War II (informally dubbed the war to end all wars?). Cemeteries filled with international soldiers from all across the world pay homage to the struggles in which all valour, honour and respect is now gone.

The world is a changed place from the times of Civil Struggle. Peace, something that is hard won and always seems to take too long is now a process of argument and dialogue, mixed messages and struggle within itself. Politicians are public servants. Germany, now a capitalist country is pretty much power sharing with all the countries it once fought against, with France becoming very much socialist. The irony is, despite being an advocate for socialism, the question has to be at what cost?

I choose socialism because there are more people without than with money in the modern age. Scotland is being killed, physically killed by substance misuse, alcohol misuse and social problems. Manufacturing has been pulled out of Britain and more than irony, big business is leaving the only sane voice in the entire world. Banks have irresponsibly misused their global power and destroyed the economy for a generation of individuals and ultimately I am still writing because I don't believe that the future is bright as I was led to believe. In actual fact, the dystopian image that is pumped daily from all cinemas, televisions and dramatical theatres is an image of zombies who spew blood after being reanimated. In this instance, I will draw an analogy to Human Immune Virus.

Anti-American sentiment in light of racism is not what this is. A film depicting a group of Gerry Anderson-esque dolls running riot across the world saving lives and being disrespectful to all life everywhere (especially Africa). Now imagine you had H.I.V and saw that film, how would you feel? Now imagine you found out that Anti-retrovirals (the medication that an entire planet with H.I.V would crave) was being withheld by a very kindly American citizen, how would you feel? Now, imagine it was you?

Personally, I would write about my fascination with time travel for years, work out that Einstein was potentially a spy, hence his inability to lead Israel as its leader in peace and that he was highly intelligent. But the question is not who was Einstein or was he intelligent, rather the question is, where would the world be without the Special and General Theory? Without Foucault and Willem Wundt? Without all the German philosophers and Freud? Probably less neurotic.

A note on over sentimentality

Who is to blame is not the point of this book. Rather, who stops adults from eating the trotters of pigs or even dogs heads? The idea that there are levels of survival is disturbing, because I am pretty sure I read in a newspaper that South Africa was opening it's first school of Witchcraft, to which I was distraught. What would likely be the first thing you learn in a school of Wicca (a different form of pagan arts and crafts).

Germany is a Christian country, so I elect Germany to pay reparations for slavery. This might sound rude, but I really have no say in the matter so I am simply voicing my opinion. But at the same time, who pays the rest of the countries? Make poverty history was in 2005. Since then, Britain's former Prime Minister toured Africa along with Britain's current Prime Minister. America's former President travelled to Africa. The current pope I fear was preoccupied with public engagements and prayer.

A simple question from someone who is not religious at present. Why does the Catholic state have a reserve of Gold? A German pope did not even hint at reparations. The current pontiff has not hinted at reparations. War is looming as ever and the role of Religion is to save lives, as opposed to pray for the starved and malnutrition(ed) because of the ease with which a few whispered words will nourish a famished belly as opposed to a soul.

To stand up to a superpower is one thing, sort of like David and Goliath in the modern age. But to stand up to the world and scream, help, disarm and disarm now is something totally different, so hopefully anyone who hears this diatribe will be suitably impressed at the diction, use of grammar, tone and syntax as opposed to listening to the message and judging the quality of content (that is, I choose no page numbers so you can get lost in this voice, I choose no table of contents so that the internals are a surprise and I choose to be silent as of now).

A note on not being silent

A war does not have to be violent, oppressive or negative in sentiment. But this is likely an act of war if there is no support or help from the lovely people who helped a few refugees from the enemies of state. I am not Syrian and whilst I didn't support the war against Syria, I can understand it. I have met many refugees (very few) and even less people who have stated "I would fight for / against ISIS". I have met even less people (none) who would state "reparations for the enemies of state".

How responsible is it to pick a fight with the big brother of hate? I try every day to be responsible in one capacity or another. I try very hard to pray even where I have renounced faith in humanity. I try even harder to believe in something that a whole country has informed me is an ill conceived notion. The United Nations is in America. Even if the leader of Germany were to walk into the European Union and request that all nations pay reparations for the nations involvement in the barbarism of slavery, I would still be all the more grateful to the world. But instead, at the risk of mirroring national sentiment at present, this is not the case.

Were Britain to be dragged into another exercise of restraint as a result of my words, thoughts and actions, I would fail due to my inability to respect a nation that has formulated it's own dynamic image of self worth and strength, superiority and intellectual / physical aggression. Meanwhile, the world dies of Cancer, Aids, Ebola and all manner of illnesses. Glaxo-Smith Kline, the leading provider of Anti-retroviral is owned by Proctor and Gamble. The British Medical Council (out on a limb here) has been researching into a cure for the very same illness. That is a war effort. That is the only war effort in the world. America's president (former) was halted and then had his healthcare bill repealed due to (racism, bigotry and hatred, akin to the sentiments of a former Mr A. Hitler. i.e. if it was your child in an orphanage, or Jesus Christ, suffering from H.I.V in Africa, in an African body, would you say "No messiah! Your black?").

A note on Jesus Christ

Israel has a mixed population. According to the bible, many of it's inhabitants travelled from Egypt as slaves (a good reason to hold a grudge?) but as many miracles happened on their way to Israel, they became god's chosen people. So a simple request, where God can hear me (and where he cannot, I will hope someone of importance or influence hears me) please "let my people go.." *biblical reference.

Jesus Christ (a Middle Eastern man, born to Middle Eastern parent(s)) became known as king of the Jews. I pray that if he can hear me, he will forgive all the wrongs done to the Jews over the countless millennia with a view to saving all lives in Africa where I cannot. And where Jesus cannot, I curse all mankind at one and the same time (in the same breath) such that all war consumes the world in such a shroud that all men, women and children learn the true meaning of slavery / subjecthood through conscription such as the likes has not been seen and will never be seen again. Not a Jihad (which is a few needless beheading's in the most uncouth of manners). Rather I am talking about Apocalypse in the biblical sense. An actual Nuclear disaster, starting in Germany and spreading across Europe until, finally it rests on the head of a dear president of mine (Mr Putin).

*(disclaimer) this is simply a point on religion. i.e. a politer way of expressing dissatisfaction with the delicate nature of war and peace would be (what is the opposite of war? Why do politicians favour peace as opposed to war? What happens when politicians don't favour peace over war?

*(disclaimer II) I am not racist against the German nation or the Israeli nation or the Jewish people(s), just very much eager to gain faith in humanity (though it is not forthcoming).

A note on pre-industrialisation

Imagine being racially abused by people younger than you? Imagine being racially abused by people who don't live in your local area and are younger than you? Imagine foreign people being racially racist (French and Italian). That is the world. Now imagine every nation from Spain to Japan being racist. That is the world. Now imagine ignoring it your whole life and waiting for the next Oxfam (a charity) advert only to realise, you know nothing about diplomacy, tact or respect.

What use is diplomacy, tact or respect in light of a loss of dignity regardless of which side of the fence you sit on. What use is diplomacy and tact or respect when nobody actually cares about anything other than money?

A note on engineering and manufacture / industry

Name an industry that doesn't interact and (or) trade unethically.

A note on sleepless nights

The environment heats up with the planet still spinning on it's wobbling tilt. Africa, being closest to the sun, due to the nuclear explosions on the other end of the planet heats up. A nuclear explosion in a sea of the coast of Africa (the entire planet heats up, polar icecaps melt) and all the while hurricane after hurricane follows. Only nuclear states have the power to do this. The last hurricane (possibly the first in recent history) killed a lot of people. Without flood defences, the whole continent (currently planting tree's) faces potentially more death.

A note on angry governments

China was an empire 3,500 years before Christ. They are now building railways in Africa. Infrastructure that is on loan (for a fee) to African nations (that have to pay back parts of the loan). A dangerous policy due to the effect of non repayment of the loan.

A note on angry individuals

I apologise again on behalf of all peoples everywhere for all peoples everywhere who cannot apologise for themselves (I was not raised to apologise, but as an ambassador for myself, my family and my kids). I would also like to extend a warm welcome to the current trend of writing books. If you have enjoyed this book, I thank you and hope you have enjoyed reading it as much as I have enjoyed writing it.

The Lords prayer

Our father,
who art in heaven
hallowed be thy name
Thy kingdom come
Thy will be done
on earth as it is in heaven
give us this day our daily bread and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us deliver us from evil
and lead us not into temptation
for thyne is the kingdom
